SOUTH BELOIT — North American Tool is celebrating 30 years of serving the manufacturing industry, providing quality customer service and dedication.

The company employees 75 associates and had an informal gathering of employees, retirees and business partners for cake and ice cream at their facility in South Beloit on April 21.

“This is an exciting time for our organization. We are very fortunate to have had the support of our community and our industry for 30 years,” said North American Tool President and CEO Curt Lansbery. “We thank our associates, our customers and our colleagues for their loyalty and dedication.”

Founded in 1986, in South Beloit by a father and son team, North American Tool is based on the principals of outstanding customer service, creating quality products, and on-time shipments.

North American Tool is a company that recognizes the need to service the precision manufacturing needs in the United States.

North American Tool Corporation, a precision manufacturer, provides customers and partners with made-to-order cutting tools, namely: special taps, threading dies and thread gages.

Co-founder Kenyon Taylor worked in the cutting tool industry for decades, having previously founded Regal-Beloit Corporation. His son, Roger, managed the company until he passed away in 2004, at which time Curt Lansbery assumed the leadership role.

North American Tool is internationally recognized with products and services in 56 countries, Lansbery said. For 30 years the company has been committed to quality and service by offering customers a full range of custom designed cutting tools made in the United States, and a technical service department that customers count on for personalized service and quick response.
